

Section 30

Section 30(1)(a)(i) states “Information held by a public authority is exempt information if it has at any time been held by the authority for the purposes of an investigation which the public authority has a duty to conduct with a view to it being ascertained whether a person should be charged with an offence”. The Commission is able to apply this exemption as section 28 of the Gambling Act sets out its powers to investigate and institute criminal proceedings in respect of offences committed under the Act.

Having considered that the requested information is exempt under section 30(1)(a) it is necessary to consider the public interest test to identify whether there is a wider public interest in disclosing this information as opposed to maintaining the exemption.

In favour of disclosure

- disclosure of the requested information could demonstrate to stakeholders and relevant parties that the Commission is active in investigating suspicious betting and that this disclosure may actually encourage stakeholders (for example Sports Governing Bodies and other law enforcement agencies) to work with us and contribute to our programme of work here
- there is a legitimate public interest in promoting accountability and transparency of public authorities public disclosure of this information may also, by way of demonstrating our proactive work in this area, discourage unlawful activities being pursued (which is in the public interest)

In favour of maintaining the exemption

- disclosure of the requested information may prejudice the outcome of any future investigation by the Commission, or another body, to the detriment of the public interest public
- disclosure of source’s details could discourage information sharing in the future

Balance of public interest arguments

Given the points considered, the Commission believes that the interests of the public are better served through maintaining the exemption. The nature of the information requested may prejudice the outcome of any future investigation by the Commission, therefore we are not in a position to disclose further details.
